

My mother and I both subscribe to Indiana's Telephone Privacy Act. We would be greatly disappointed if a national act lessened the impact of this state statute. Our evenings at home have been made much more peaceful without two to three annoying telemarketers calling. I no longer feel I have to screen all calls to avoid them. I also have greater peace of mind that fewer callers can attempt to take advantage of my 79-year old mother, by talking her into purchases she does not need or want. Thank you.
